Biography

Fatine-Violette Sabiri is a Moroccan-raised Montreal artist living and working as a multi-disciplined author of a variety of projects. She has worked prolifically as a photographer for online and print publications, both commissioned and self-directed. With her working partner Gérald Lajoie-Restrepo she has developed two clothing collections showcased by their own self-produced lookbooks and an independently organized runway show. She is currently pursuing a BFA at Concordia University with the study of various tactile arts and crafts and a pointed and invested emotional interest in her immediate social communities and personal history, which continues to be the subject of her work. This is the first solo exhibition of her work.
